TWO STRANGE ANIMALS. The Rev. J. E. Tennison-Woods, in his

"Notes of travel," gives the following account of two curious animals peculiar to the Indian Archipelago :-

I must return now somewhat upon my foot steps for the sake of briefly noticing two strange animals which are confined to so small a portion of the Archipelago, and are so exceptional in their structure that they stand apart, as it were, from the zoology of these lands. The first these is the Babirusa (hogdeer). The French naturalist D'Orbigny gave us, if not the earliest certainly the most reliable notices of the strange creature. It is like a pig, with long slender legs; but it feeds on leaves and fruits, and does not rent. The tasks of the lower jaw are long and slender, directed upwards and curving cognisances in the sum of $25 each to be of good slightly. Those of the upper are also directed upwards, not like the usual tusks of pigs which grow downwards. These same upper tusks are set in long sockets, and they reach an inordinate length, sometimes eight or ten inches, ourvir ; backwards to the eyes. The female is without these teeth. The animal is, in short, a kind of wild boar with short hair, making it look bare. a thin skin, a slender head, and small eyes and ears. The tusks, which look very formidable, are almost useless for attack because of their curving over so much, hence it is easily captured. It is found all over Celebes, in the Scoloo group. and in Boura, one of the Molaccas, separated by a narrow strait from Amboyna, where, however, the babirusa lives not. H.M.S. As a matter of fact, Mr. Westland's share in the transaction was confined merely to his visit to Gwalier to finally settle the term of the 31 crore loan, which had been previously offered at the sole instance of dir Gunpat Rao, with the cheerful consent of his collegues in the Council of Regency. The task of discovering the vaults and unearthing, counting, and registering what subsequently proved to be avast treasure, amounting to Rs. 62,500,000, devolved on Colonel Bannorman, the then Resident at Gwalior, whose laboars, commencing in October, 1886, were not completed till the middle of May, 1887. How he discovered the various and ingeniously contrived hiding places of the treasure is immaterial; suffice it to say that the clue, when obtained, was not lost sight of until Colonel Bannerman brought It is quite possible that there may be still further and more extensive heards.

In addition to the hoards of coinage there is an almost inestimable quantity of jewels. Scindia's collection of diamonds, pearls, rubies, emerald. &c., is probably unique, and beyond the concept tion of even the fabled Aladdin. The native papers maintain that the Indian Princes are poor; but the case of the late Maharaja Scindia is certainly not an example. No doubt in 1878, when his Highness appealed for and obtained from Government an urgent loan of 50 lakks to anable him to meet the viscissitudes of a famine, the impression amongst native politicisms of the poverty. EXPLORATION OF GREENLAND. Although the report that Nordenskiole intended to spend eighteen months in Antarctic exploration does not appear to have been well founded, says the New York Times, it is probable that the southern polar region will soon be visited by an exploring party. Sir Allen Young has offered to the Australian Colonies his services as leader of an expedition, and it is proposed that the enterprise shall be supported by grant of $40,000. Explorers will soon be at work in the Arctic region: Nosilof, who has spent three years in trying to find a practicable route from Northern Russia to Siberia, now intends to make a survey of the consts and interior of Nova Zembla. Before the end of the coming summer a expedition will be sent to the northeast coast of Greenland by Herr Gamic, under the direction of Lieutenaut Hovgaard, who commanded the Djmphna in 1882. The west coast of Greenland has been thoroughly explored, from Cape, Farawell through Smith Sound and Kennedy Channel to the point on the north shore reached by Lockwood and Brainard, of the Greely party, in 1881. ha northern part of the east coast is stil to be traced. Two years ago the Dinish expedition, under Lieutenant Holm, explored the east coast from Cape Farewell to 66.20 north. The great masses of ice backed against the shore in January and February and throughout the spring months do not begin to disappear until June or July, so that the best season for exploration is the autumn and the early part of winter. While payigation is more difficult on the east coast, the land seems to be better fitted to sustain life than the region on the other side of the great island or peninsula. Fiv vears ago Nordenskjold penetrated the in terior from a point near Disco Island on the west coast expecting to discover a large inland sea. He found no sea, but in its place a desert of ice. At a point 225 miles from the coast he reached an elevation of 7,000 feet. But the naturalist, Pansch, attached to the German expedition of 1869-70, had found a far more attractive region on the east coast and at a much higher latitude. Nordenskjold's journey was made in 69 deg., or 70 deg, north. Dr. Pansch and his associates reached the east coast in the vicinity of the Pendulum Telands, 5 deg. farthernorth. While Nordenskjold was repelled by ice, Penach reported that the interior was free from snow, and that the soil supported rich and vigorous vegetation. There were green pastures at the foot of the mountains and on the slopes, while forms and alpine roses flourished in the clefts of the rocks.

There are many natives on the cast coast, and parties of them occasionally make fourners to the settlements on the northwest shore. Scoresby found Esquimaux near the sound which bears his name. in 70 deg. north. The expedition to which 'Dr. Pansch was attached found huts at seven places 300 miles farther north, but they had been abandoned. Perhaps Lieutenant Hovgsard will discover the northern limit of habitation.

A REMARKABLE MAN.

Sam Brewer, a half-breed Cherokee, who has both legs off above the ankles, his right arm off above the clow, and his left arm off about four inches below the elbow, is in attendance at the United States Court to answer three indictments for assault with intent to kill, his weapon of warfare being a Winchester rifle.

In one of the cases he acknowledges that he shot at a man named Phipps, and killed the horse he was riding, but claims be did it in self-defence. The other two cases he declines to discuss, saying they will have to prove them on him.

Brower is certainly a remarkable man. He is 32 years old and has a wife and two children. He resides on a farm near Fort-Gibson, his principal occupation being that of a cowboy. He is an expert horseman and a good shot with a rifle. In handling a Winebester he works the hammer and trigger with the stump of his left arm, while with the stump of his right arm he manipulates the lever that throws the cartridges into the barrel of the gun from the magazine and the empty shells out. In eating he fastens a fork to the stump of his left arm and thus receives regular SPECIAL TELEGRAMS ing and undressing himself. This he cannot do without assistance.

But the nownaked lobster did not look at all like his old self. "On my return from luncheon I touched him, and found that, although quite soft, he was covered with an incipient shell of the approximate solidity of ciled tissue paper. He did not like being touched. During the three following days the shrimps worried him a good deal; but he grew with marvellous rapidity until be was fully half as big again as he had been, and when I once more touched him the shell on his big claws was sufficiently hard to enable him to give me a spiteful nip.

"I have omitted to mention one curious FITHE above Company is prepared to GRANT circumstance connected with this particular animal's toilet. When the lobster was given to me he was without his left big claw, which had, I suppose, been accidentally wrenched off by his original captor. The stump very quickly pealed up, a hard, calcareous seal incrusting the end of the joint. To my astonishment, when the lobster worked himself out of his old shell he appeared with a rudimentary left claw, which had evidently formed behind the shield. This claw grew even more rapidly than the rest of the hody; and, by the time the new shell was hard, the new claw, though still disproportionate, was of very serviceable dimensions. I do not believe that the loss of a claw is a matter of much more moment to a lobster than it is to a crab. Sometimes, indeed, both lobsters and crabs appear to dismember themselves voluntarily. I have known a lebster to get one of his claws hopelessly, wedged in between the withes of a lobster-pot and leave it there in the most nonchalant manner
